About MIPAD

The Most Influential People of African Descent (MIPAD) is a global civil society initiative in support of the United Nation's International Decade for people of African Descent.

The Decade was proclaimed by the United Nation's General Assembly resolution 68/237, to be observed from 2015 to 2024. MIPAD identifies high achievers of African descent around the world in four categories: (I) Politics & Governance (II) Business & Entrepreneurship (III) Media & Culture (IV) Religious & Humanitarian, with the aim to build a progressive network of relevant actors who will join together in the spirit of recognition, justice and development of Africa both on the continent and across the diaspora.

MOST INFLUENTIAL PEOPLE OF AFRICAN DESCENT

Class of 2017 & 2018
MESSAGE

It is with great honor that we unveil the 2018 Most Influential People of African Descent (MIPAD) global list to highlight the positive contribution made by people of African descent in public and private sectors worldwide.

The theme for 2018 Recognition Week in honor of the Most Influential 100 Honorees is “Global Recognition. Leadership Training. Local Impact.”

Our goal with MIPAD is to build a progressive network of civil society actors to join together and support the implementation of the International Decade for People of African Descent, 2015 - 2024, as proclaimed by the United Nations General Assembly Resolution 68/237.

Please join us in congratulating the 2018 MIPAD honorees for their contributions to societies around the world and for their resilience and strength in the face of adversity, BRAVO!

CONGRATULATIONS

It is my distinct honour to congratulate Ms. Chereda Grannum, Project Officer of the Ministry of Creative Economy, Culture and Sports - Commission for Pan-African Affairs, on her recognition as one of the Global Top 100 Most Influential People of African Descent under 40 Class of 2018.

Ms. Grannum’s work continues to be an invaluable contribution to the Commission for Pan-African Affairs’ mandate to empower Afro-Barbadians and to strengthen our institutions and positively enhance national life by building relationships, exchanges and interactions with the nation’s population groups and institutions of the continent of Africa and the wider African Diaspora.

Ms. Grannum has once again gained a coveted place in the halls of history, being the first Barbadian to have earned the prestigious designation of United Nations Fellow for the International Decade for People of African Descent (IDPAD) in 2016; and is now the first Barbadian to be recognised by the Most Influential People of African Descent (MIPAD) Global 100 Under 40 - Politics and Governance list. This is a remarkable achievement and as Barbadians, we are proud of her and applaud her success and recognition.

The Government of Barbados formally launched the IDPAD in February 2015, and supports the work of the MIPAD 100 initiative in recognising the contributions of those individuals at the forefront of the global efforts to achieve the objectives of the Decade.

The Hon. John A. King, M.P.

From Most Influential People of African Descent (MIPAD) 100, Under 40
Throughout my years on this earth, I have learned many lessons. I do wish, however, that I had a learning curve of knowing that talent alone is not enough to be successful in your chosen career. Blindly, I thought that your talent could take you anywhere. I know now, that there is much more involved. For example, fully understanding the business behind your chosen field and constantly educating yourself as the world and your industry, in particular, are changing and advancing each day, are imperative to your success. It is also equally important to connect with the right people and build a strong network across industries.

When faced with challenges, I had to make a choice. I could either let them swallow me or move forth. I knew my challenges were keeping me away from my goals, so I decided that regardless of the obstacles I face, my end game would be a success. No matter how difficult, I pushed hard, followed the rules and learned as much as I could from my experiences. I will also add that my spirituality and being someone who prays a lot, has been integral to my success. I am driven! I have meaning!

Knowing that I have a purpose drives me to achieve daily. I wake up every morning with the zeal to accomplish my goals. My priorities in life are to please God, be the best I can be to my family, be as successful as I can be in my field and positively impact as many lives as possible. Although each day varies from filming, to podcasting, to writing, or teaching, I am grateful to live the life of an artist.
Excellence means a number of things to me but it all connects back to one root, which is, ultimately be the best version of you. It took me some time to feel content with the speed and direction my life was going because of all the crazy and wonderful ideas I had but lack of resources and organizational skills to bring them to life.

Understanding gratitude is key and combining that with setting goals, doing everything you can in your ability and then trusting in the process that the work will all manifest. Until I understood gratitude, I understood all the resources I needed were already in front of me, I just wasn't looking in the right direction.

During my process of working in the fashion and entertainment industry, I’ve learned more lessons in a small space of three years than most of my life. Most importantly, I've learned that life is not a sprint but a marathon and there is no need for chasing. Rather, your focus should be on creating. Being a Muslim, Hijab wearing woman, being mixed racially and growing up in the UK, breaking into the entertainment and fashion industry was never going to be straightforward. Keeping that in mind, I learned very early, I couldn't wait for opportunities but rather create them for myself and open doors for others too.

The drive to keep pushing forward comes from God and my family. Without purpose, I would feel no motivation to do what I do daily. Without wanting to better my family and the lives of others, I wouldn't have endless goals and dreams and life would feel pretty unfulfilling. My priority is to live my purpose to my full potential which will consume the rest of my life. But as long as I enjoy what I do, it will never feel like work.

I learned that excellence isn't a destination but a journey. Excellence is about feeling successful because you are on that journey, instead of waiting to feel successful when and if you ever reach that destination we call success. Helping others reach their goals along the way is also a part of the success. Your legacy isn't simply from your personal achievements but from how you helped others achieve theirs.
LUNGA NENE

Where excellence is not in the daily language of a community, lack of access and inequality are pillars of the glass ceiling found hampering the efforts toward its normalization.

If we agree that ‘African Excellence’ should serve as a tool for equality, then our job as people of African descent under the age of forty is to introduce a more apt definition of excellence. This will allow us to set goals that cement real change driven by the results of opportunity. Unlike physics, excellence is not a static construct and cannot have a narrow set of indicators.

The dictionary defines ‘Excellence’ as “the quality of being outstanding or extremely good.” Its presence in a world moving from analog functionality to Artificial Intelligence must be a mutating one. For the African youth, their results lie in the broadened development and a deepening of opportunity across the globe throughout the changing times.

The Nelson Mandela Foundation calls on all of us to #BeTheLegacy during the celebrations of Nelson Mandela’s centenary year. It asks us to observe the life of Madiba, as he is fondly called in South Africa, in a way that unifies our purpose towards this opportunity and equality. The call is rooted in the understanding that where one starts has no bearing on their potential to change the world. It hands us the ownership of building a world that systematic oppression deems an impossible fantasy. It charges us to be revolutionaries daily, driven by the basic understanding that what is African is both an identity and apparatus.

As a young African woman, I find my role in the development of the continent and its people to be a personal one. My work involves cementing an understanding that excellence should become a global norm undefined by heritage or privilege. To this end, the legacy of Nelson Mandela helps me navigate a set of universally applicable values towards equality and equity. Growing up in democratic South Africa has also alerted me to the importance of profiling the stories of the marginalized and those without voices. Across the continent, they are our purpose and definition.

With almost all African people under the age of forty, is a personal story of deep inequality that motivates a shift towards broadening opportunity. This shared commonality binds us in the fight for dignity for all. To this end, we are all on a personal journey that must pave the way for our future generations.

It is no mistake that the narrative of excellence is currently being brought back to conversations about Africa and its people. It is a heightened consciousness of a hollowness in current global standards, an admission of a lack of inclusivity and understanding that what is outstanding or extremely good exists in varied pockets of society.

Our job, in no uncertain terms, is to declare that excellence exists with vibrancy in African people. It is my conviction as a part of the class of 2018 MIPAD Global Top 100 that this is what it is to #BeTheLegacy because my beginnings have no power or bearing on my potential.
I took the long way to get my photography published because I didn’t see that working on your own projects and focusing squarely on your passions will bring people to you. There is no need of you trying to convince them of your worth.

My greatest challenge continues to be navigating an industry (travel photography) that is predominantly white and male and getting those photography assignments that editors always seem to assign to rugged white guys. I have illustrated many publications with my photography, shot many assignments, and been recognized for my work. It’s a matter of believing in myself and keeping the momentum even if the industry isn’t ready to support me.

Travel is about being an open-minded sponge to not only soak up other cultures in respect, but to also squeeze some of me and my culture out in return to foster understanding, break down bias, and break through prejudices. That is what drives me. Fully listening to others and connecting with our very basic humanity.

I have many priorities but my main focus, career-wise, is to continually work smarter, not harder by actively focusing on the three “P’s” – Partnerships, Projects, and Passive Income. Personally, I continue to work daily on self-care and ensure I get adequate rest in a mad-dash world. My day-to-day ranges from assignments and lunch meetings to family time and sometimes staying in bed all day and reading a book, which is, the beauty of this flexible lifestyle I’ve built with my family.

Excellence is a powerful and actionable word. When I think back, as a child, my dreams scared the daylights out of me because they were wild, idealistic, borderline delusional and as unattainable as dreams could be. They seemed in direct contrast to what I was expected to dream about as a Nigerian girl. I wanted to travel the world. I wanted to write worldly fiction. I wanted to be a geologist. I wanted to be an artist. I wanted to do what I was passionate about instead of what I was expected to do. I wanted to be my most authentic self in a world that had predefined boxes which it constantly tries to stuff people in.

Decades later and having carved a career out of those seemingly audacious dreams, I believe EXCELLENCE means living your truth and thriving within your natural passions with a resilience that feels timeless and evergreen.
Growing up with an immigrant Nigerian father who achieved his doctorate in his early twenties and a US American mother who was the first in her family to attend and graduate from university, excellence was a notion that permeated throughout my upbringing. My sisters and I were encouraged to do well in school, to treat people well and fairly, and to do well in sports and hobbies. Proudly, excellence remains ingrained in me to this day and I am committed to living a life of excellence in all that I do.

For me, living a life of excellence means to always try to give my best, whether that is in work, study, or relationships with family, friends, colleagues, and strangers. Excellence is knowing my strengths and my weaknesses. Excellence is knowing who I am and where my talents can best be used. Excellence is knowing when to say yes and when to say no. Excellence is being humble, grateful, full of wisdom and understanding, adaptable, and accountable.

Excellence is not perfectionism. Excellence is not striving to be the best at everything, as it is important to know and accept that excellence is possible. Excellence is not presenting a false or inflated image of oneself. Excellence is not showing off or being boastful. Excellence makes room for others to succeed and helps others be their best.

I believe that excellence is a process that we journey on all throughout our lives. As I go throughout my own life, I do my best, whether the task is big or small, noticed or unnoticed. I either succeed or fail or fall somewhere in between. I learn with gratitude. And I keep going on, taking my new knowledge and experiences with me and building upon them. Excellence is a concept of which I am immensely proud. I am forever thankful that my parents taught and modeled excellence for me.

I do not have to be the best, but knowing that I gave my best is what drives me in all aspects of my life. Thank you, Most Influential People of African Descent (MIPAD) for recognition as a Global 100 Honoree, Class of 2018. I look forward to working with fellow honorees to continue the important work of addressing human rights concerns during the International Decade for People of African Descent (2015–2024) and beyond.
If I knew then what I know now I would tell my younger self that failure is not necessarily a bad thing if you know how to turn your failures into valuable lessons. If I had this bit of information early on, I would have taken more risks and BOLD steps. I now take every chance as an opportunity to learn, explore and excel.

I have had some challenges. It’s quite an experience to wake up and realize that the person you had built the greatest (business) partnership with is no longer the person you thought they were. My biggest challenge was to part ways and venture on my own because our priorities had shifted. Taking time to reflect is key! I say this because reflection allows you to re-align with your values and priorities. My greatest challenge taught me about my inner fight. I knew I wanted to win so much that I did everything I could to get back to the moment of winning. The biggest learning point for me was knowing the value of a rich network and how to activate each network at the right time.

What drives me is making a contribution to my community and ultimately the continent at large. I used to complain a lot about what was wrong in my ‘country’ until one day I had to stop complaining and started working a little each day to make a difference in my own way. If each one of us works on something that we can change or transform in our communities, we would change the world. Starting my business was such a great and BOLD moment of realizing that I can make a contribution to the tech ecosystem in Uganda by providing a solution to a pertinent distribution crisis in the country.

I am excited to say that I am a trend-setter! Being a trend-setter matters in any industry you are working. I focus a lot on research and understanding what everyone else is doing and how I can ultimately find a unique spot to differentiate myself. I also try and focus on giving back and mentoring the next generation of techpreneurs. It is each of our duty to help others be even better than ourselves.
TANIA TOMÉ

If I could speak to my younger self I would say, Tania Tomé, I am glad to have you as part of my history. I am amazed by you, your experiences and the positive energy you possessed after dealing with failures and mistakes. You learned everyday “by doing”, and have appreciated all the amazing things life has offered you, including the obstacles. From the age of 10-years old, you knew to maintain the child inside that’s grateful, happy, who knows how to enjoy life. You couldn’t change the past but understood that you could direct your future. You are very committed to creating history with our hands. Dearest Tania, I love you more and more each day and I am blessed we have this life. Thank you.

Today, I can say that I have overcome challenges with passion, confidence and the belief that nothing is impossible. The best way is to bounce back knowing that belief is an important resource that can be used to energize me and allows me to follow my succenergy, principles, and rules. When challenges come, it’s important for me to refocus on the goal, not to stay and wallow in the issue, but to forge forth toward my dreams with action. My energy is focused on health, family, happiness, wealth and success. I will remain driven by Energy, Motivation, and most important, Succenergy!!! (www.taniatome.com)

MARIO RIGBY

If I could send a message to my younger self I would share that anything is truly possible. I would let the young in me know that you can overcome any challenge by thinking logically. I would say to always strive to be better to mankind and self. I would also say to focus your energy on improving your craft and be willing to push the limits. Each day will hold a lot of data analysis and preparation but this journey is one of adventure.

MOST INFLUENTIAL PEOPLE OF AFRICAN DESCENT

ROBINSON LYNN

“When you understand that you matter, you realize there are some things that you won’t do but there’s nothing you can’t do.”

Nelson Mandela, the late South African anti-apartheid revolutionary, political leader, philanthropist, and former President of South Africa from 1994 to 1999 once said: “I dream of an Africa which is in peace with itself.” That, too, is the Africa of my dreams.

What’s more, I dream of an Africa that is known around the world for her greatness: the brilliance and creativity of her people, the vastness and variety of her beauty, and the abundance of her divine gifts. The Africa of my dreams stretches her hands throughout the world, sharing her greatness for the benefit of all. It is the Africa of yesterday, today and tomorrow.

The great thing about a dream is that it can be a reality, and an aspiration at the same time. That’s a perspective that can be applied to the greatness of Africa, the most interesting and diverse continent on the Earth. Africa is the home to a wide range of people and cultures. Scientists, anthropologists, and historians tell us that Africa is where human beings first walked the earth and that it is the home of the world’s first great civilization dating back to 3300 BC.

We also know that with approximately one billion people speaking more than one thousand languages, the African continent, with 54 independent countries, has the second largest population in the world. It is a rich mixture of cultures, history, and economies, all of which point to her greatness now and over time... the real-life manifestation of the Africa of my dreams.

The Africa of my dreams that is yet to be realized is that the world will know, acknowledge, and appreciate the greatness of Africa, that Africa’s "peace with itself" is a model for nations on other continents, that her resources are not plundered but preserved... that her people are not appeased but applauded. The greatness of Africa already exists. We just need to tell the world.

In the aftermath of the fall of South Africa’s apartheid system, my mother, Robin Lynn, moved our family from New York City to Cape Town because she wanted to actively participate in creating a world that works for everyone. She saw South Africa as a fertile environment for big new ideas, particularly the idea that everyone matters. This is the context in which she raised my siblings and me.

Like the great cathedral builders of the Middle Ages, my mother toiled long and hard toward a very big vision and did not get to see the completion of her work, in this world, at least. However, she left knowing that I would continue what she had started. And although I no longer live in Africa, I have made it my life's work to honor her legacy, and to share with people around the world the empowering impact of her ideas.
Excellence to me starts with having a clear vision and making strides to achieve it. As my mentor, Mr. Aliko Dangote would say – “Think Big!” Excellence comes with the strength of building synergy with like-minded creatives and having mentors who can walk you through the principles of success and failures.

To birth excellence, I learned to be persistent. I define it as facing an obstacle to your vision and rather than walking away from it, you push through it. This formed the bedrock of my brand Loatsad Promomedia, which sets out to break the barriers of advertising in Nigeria.

I learned from the early days of our humble beginning that people won't buy into your vision of winning unless they feel connected to the organization. Connection starts with having a powerful vision people can believe in and feel good about. Creating momentum requires going requires a variety of leadership behaviors that often get overlooked in the rush to get the product out the door. At Loatsad Promomedia, we consider leadership development as something that is integral to our success and ultimately the excellence we seek to deliver every day to our customers.

I remember when my partner and I thought about our first iconic location, we were seen as too young, inexperienced and told that our vision could not work. We, however, turned this into our success story by digging deeper into understanding our craft, the requirements of its structure and seeking the right partners who would bring our vision to life.

I have a strong desire to make an impact in my environment and thankfully, I am blessed with a wife who is just as passionate about helping people and giving back to the society. This made us create The Noella Tinubu Foundation (named after our daughter) where we had our inaugural CSR Initiative called S.T.E.P (Seyi Tinubu Empowerment Program). This program exposed us to hundreds of young innovative entrepreneurs in the tech space. We believe that our foundation will create the platform that will encourage young people to strive for excellence and become change-makers in their society.

Lastly, excellence to me is the driving force of life with a 'Think Big' mindset of creating a difference. Like Steve Jobs said, “Be a yardstick of quality, some people aren’t used to an environment where excellence is expected.” Also, it is our attitude that translates itself into excellence, a reflection of passion and commitment.
In my view, excellence is tenacity plus inspiration, measured on an individual basis, kind of like yoga.

The marker of excellence is the ability to set objectives, surmount challenges, step back, assess and change strategy when needed to achieve set objectives. In his book, A Long Walk to Freedom, Nelson Mandela discussed how he utilized various strategies to get his voice heard. Sometimes it was a verbal protest, and then standing back and watching things develop. However, often times it was a silent protest. Whatever the strategy, Mandela embodied excellence and inspiration in his fight for the people of South Africa. Another key element for success is intentionally carving out time to reflect upon successes and failures, which can sometimes, brings forth more effective outcomes. Finally, excellence should be undertaken with grace at every possible point, because a positive outlook and understanding of how to work with others will carry one very far in life.

My greatest challenge is being placed in the four corners of a box, which is in a total contradiction of my upbringing by parents who assured me that I could do anything I set my heart to. My parents were not all talk, as they were accomplished in their pursuits. They always challenged my siblings and me to be kind to others and always figure out a way to use our God-given talents to make humanity better. Finally, they always told us to place God at the center of all we do. Anchored by my upbringing I,

- Always strive to navigate unchartered territories with a positive outlook.
- Make it a priority to learn the rules of engagement.
- Fight fair and be respectful towards everyone I encounter.
- Keep my dynamic personality.
- Set high standards for myself.
- Build important alliances to last a lifetime.
- Navigate the rough terrains of being a woman of African descent with grace and “collegiality” as U.S. Supreme Court Justice Ruth Bader Ginsburg always advised.

I am driven by the zest to be part of things larger than me and that better humanity for many generations to come. I worry about how history will judge me, and so that inspires me to strive to be a positive force in all contexts. But guess what? I am human with frailties and so I try my best not to worry too much about whether or not my best is enough. After all, it took the teenage David the courage, a stone, and a slingshot to slay Goliath!

These days, I focus my energy on youth, women and empowering persons of African descent and their supporters. Why? You may wonder. Well, on the youth issue, about eight years ago, I read Say Are You One of Them by Jesuit author Uwem Akpan. In it, he chronicles the ordeals youth of African descent from Rwanda, Ethiopia, Nairobi, Nigeria, and an unnamed country, all adversely impacted by conflict, corruption, and disease, because of the decisions made by adults. This catapulted me into activism around youth rights: starting an NGO (non-governmental organization), researching, drafting and arguing the passage of American Bar Association Resolution on the Convention on the Rights of the Child and managing a portfolio on youth issues at the U.S. House of Representatives in DC. My passion for women and persons of African descent come from my observation of challenges they must surmount. This is also what has inspired my book in progress on UN Security Council Resolution 1325 on Women, Peace, and Security.

Afua Hirsch

If I were to speak to my younger self I would say, never say what you think people want to hear. Speak the truth! Ironically, it IS what people do actually want to hear. But, that's not why you’re saying it.

I am reminded that struggle is what makes us human and failing is what makes us successful. I work to keep my body and mind aligned because it helps me balance and makes me stronger. One of my favorite expressions is, love everybody, and run for your life.

I think I’m blessed with a deep and incurable curiosity, both, about people and the nature of things, which makes me genuinely enthusiastic about the work I do. I’m fascinated by life and by people's stories. A sense of happiness at what's good, and frustration and anger at what's unjust both come easily to me. Both of these things drive me.

I try to focus my labor on two different kinds of projects, those that I enjoy, and those where I can make a difference. If it doesn’t fall into one of those two categories, and ideally it falls into both, I’m not doing it. I’ve never been good at applying myself to things I don’t believe in. At times that seemed inconvenient but now I’m grateful that that instinct has saved me a lot of wasted time. Life is too short to do things you don't believe in.
My understanding of excellence came to me early in life. Being the first daughter in my family taught me leadership, responsibility and the importance of setting goals. I understood at a young age that I would be an example for my younger siblings. I had to be and live to a standard, as well, as excel in all that I did. The one thing I do wish I was prepared for at a younger age, however, is corporate politics. A lot goes into working within the public sector and that learning curve would have been helpful.

As a woman in a male-dominated sector, there is the challenge of being closely watched or going the extra mile to prove my competence. Despite those challenges, I strive to perform at my highest level in which doing the work in a timely manner yields the respect I deserve. I am also challenged with work and life balance. God, meditating, working out, and spending time with family and friends is important.

I am excited about the growing number of females who are blazing trails within the real estate sector. I enjoy mentoring a few of them and I am happy to see the level of acceptance in the industry now is better than when I started.

My drive comes from God’s grace, the pursuit of perfection and executing to improve the bottom line. I encourage my team to provide solutions to challenges and we all work to continuously learn and improve ourselves daily. I am focused and dedicated to making a change. I am grateful for this honor.
I have been an IT Executive for more than 16 years, with international experience in writing, mentoring and serving as a technology business manager. I consider myself an African born in the Diaspora knowing that being of ‘African Descent’ is something more inherent in its history than just being born in Brazil.

I am the Founder of the Black Money Movement that works with Innovation, Mindset Entrepreneurship and Financial Education for the black population. I am also in process of launching Afreektech's Black People Empowerment project, which caters primarily to black women in technology and business management, to generate a competitive mindset for professionals in the job market. Additionally, the goal is to support black entrepreneurs to instrumentalize their business. I am excited to share that my Founding partner of Fintech D’Black Bank is in the current phase of prototyping and market fit.

Over the last 10 years, I have managed project portfolios, rollouts, and systems with experience abroad, along with large consultancies in the segment. I currently work for ThoughtWorks as Project Manager, as well as companies such as Petrobras, Honda, L’Oreal, Heineken, among others.

I am passionate about speaking on the topics of Technology, Leadership, Fintech, Business Management, and Diversity in corporate and institutional environments; as well as mentoring professionals and entrepreneurs interested in these areas. I enjoy contributing as a columnist in journalistic reports about the social and economic realities of the black population in Brazil and world.

To be recognized by the international institution MIPAD (Most Influential People of African Descent) as one of the 100 most influential in the world is truly an honor.
The common thread in my journey has been a sense of optimism and enthusiasm for what I hope to accomplish in my life’s purpose. With that focus of possibility, it makes it easier to tackle challenges which are always part of the journey towards excellence. Building the Birthright AFRICA mission to instill pride, enhance confidence, and spark creativity means I have to believe in myself the way I hope for our Scholars to believe in themselves. Whether it was transitioning my career from finance to education or learning to build collaborative and effective relationships, I embrace the growth and change required to achieve excellence.

It is essential to study our greatness to explore our heritage and travel to places where we can experience it first-hand. This exploration will help us to stay inspired in spite of the challenges and will continue to be my source of strength and what is now my life’s work and purpose.

I am humbled to live out the Birthright AFRICA vision as we develop the next generation of global leaders and entrepreneurs that are proud of their African heritage, confident in their innovative aspirations and connected to the African continent.

Prior to launching the organization, I recognized the importance of learning is more about the history and cultural roots of African heritage as well as the present-day legacy of innovation being built by African descent people throughout the diaspora and Africa.
If I had known at a younger age what I know now, I would have started much earlier and focused on building what I was passionate about. Everything we focus on will manifest and out of that comes our commitment. Out of commitment comes our determination and out of determination come greatness.

Regarding business, the first challenge was structuring my ‘Group’ and planning its dynamic growth strategy and expansion. There were so many things that interesting to me and I wanted to do so much. However, I had to concentrate on the resources for the business that could generate quick money, and then I could invest the money into businesses of strategic importance, in addition to, our core businesses. The second challenge was time and project management. The good thing is I started my ‘Group’ as an events company and events are all about project management. I was able to utilize those skills in getting the ‘Group’ off the ground. Access to finances was a major challenge but I kept my eyes on the ultimate goals and focused on what I had going for me, as well as, my ability to write and strategize!

My passion for Africa is what drives me. I want to make a difference, and I am committed to economic development in Africa focusing on key sectors. Africa remains the final frontier for development because of its vast unexplored potential for investment. This is why I created the ‘Afridevelopism’ economic and philosophical initiative to promote development and social progress in Africa. The focus is to contribute to the development of key economic sectors in Africa and have a solid foundation in the five industries of manufacturing, construction, renewable energy, agribusiness, and exhibition. I am also very focused on providing access to clean energy via Labacorp Power Company. Thank you for this honor.
